Announcement That Original Tom Hughes Hit Hard by In-Four Would Represent America in Polo Games Causes Drop.

New York, June 9 .- Following the announcement that the original "Big Four' of the Meadow Brook Club had been selected to defend the international polo trophy from the invading British team, odds on the series fell from 2 to 1 on the visitors to 13 to 8.

The American representatives who will play to-morrow are the same who brought the cup back from England in 1999, and successfully defended it in 1911. The decisive defeat of the British team at that time led its members to adopt the American style of team play in preference to the individual play which had ruled across the water. The challengers themselves admit their chances have dwindled with the selection of the "Big Four," though, of course, they will not allow themselves to be quoted. One of the British team said to-day:

"We believe we could have beaten the four first selected. They were un-from 2 to 1 on the visitors to 13 to 8.

The "Big Four," composed of Harry Payne Whitney, the Waterbury Brothers and Devereux Milburn, is considered much stronger in team play and defense work than the reorganized team formerly selected to defend the cup and the devotees of the sport are overjoyed at the announcement.

Even with the drop in the odds, however, the invaders are still favorites in the series which start to-morrow on the international field at the Meadow Brook (Long Island) Club, Few hets have been put up at the new figures, though one of $500 was announced late to-day.
